

TCSS 343 - Week 1

Jake McKenzie

August 3, 2018

Divide and Conquer

“Common misconception that; that fun is relaxing.
If it is, youre not doing it right.” Iain Banks

“When writing code, its often the case that you end up computing a value that the calling function doesnt currently need. Later, however, this value may be important when the code is called in a different situation. In this situation, you should obey the law of useful return: A procedure should return all the potentially useful information it computed.”

...
Alexander Stepanov